

Concordia College: 2009 Faith, Reason and World Affairs Symposium Talking Technology

The entire campus was atwitter with all things technology during the 2009 Faith, Reason and World Affairs Symposium. With engaging speakers like generational expert Neil Howe and former Microsoft executive Doug Burgum, the symposium explored the topic "Where is the We in an iWorld? Technology and Learning in the 21st Century."

Students, faculty and staff joined in Memorial Auditorium to examine the ways technology has changed our lives – for the positive and negative – as well as even changed the ways our brains work. The community talked about the need Millennials have to be constantly "plugged in" because important social events could otherwise take place without them; how it's important to control your use of technology, rather than letting it control you; whether or not there's a need for the government to control information on the Internet; and many more topics.

Learn More:

- Read the symposium blog for more insight on this year's topic. It was written by students, faculty and staff during the event.
- Watch video recordings of the speakers' presentations.
- Watch the YouTube video made of the symposium's topic.